

Equine Welfare Standards 2025

We always prioritise the horses' physical needs, autonomy, and emotional wellbeing.

We respect them as living beings and aim to contribute positively to their world.

We look for consent in each interaction. Behaviours such as turning or moving away, pinned ears, or aggressive behaviour, are taken as non-consent.

If we notice something scares or upsets a horse, we stop doing it immediately.

We will perform a brief visual welfare check before, during and after every session. If the horse seems unwell or uncomfortable then they don't take part.

We adhere to each horse's preferences, limitations, and care plan.
